

VR Usability Test Recruitment Form: Before and After Michelle Berman - Library Technology Integration Lab, San Jose State University

The following pages show full PDF exports of the recruitment Google Form for a VR conference space usability study, before and after my suggestion, made verbally in a team Zoom meeting, that the form include a checkbox requiring participants to confirm that they had read the informed consent document before proceeding.

Pages 2-5: the original recruitment form, with no consent gate.

Pages 6-11: the revised form, with the new required consent section highlighted on the last page.

The informed consent form document itself was developed collectively by the research team and approved through SJSU's IRB process; it is not my own individual work and is not reproduced here. My contribution was specifically to the recruitment form's consent-gating mechanism shown below.

Virtual Reality Conference UX Testing

The SJSU Library Technology Integration (LTI) Lab is recruiting usability testers for a developmental virtual conference space hosted on FrameVR, a collaborative and immersive virtual reality (VR) platform accessible through mobile, desktop, and Meta Quest browsers. Participants will be asked to enter the virtual space and perform tasks dictated by a facilitator, followed by a brief questionnaire about the experience.

Participants who complete the usability test and questionnaire will receive a $10 Amazon gift card.
